FOREWORD

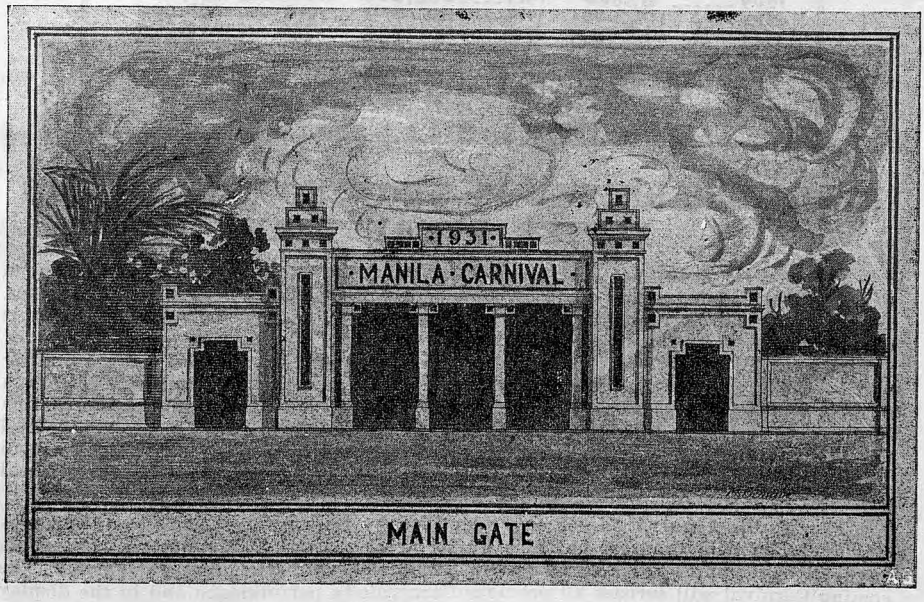

Manila and the Philippines will once more revel in a long succession of festive days and nights on the occasion of the holding of the next Manila Carnival, which is scheduled to take place early in 1932. The big event, which has become one of the most notable attractions in the entire Far East, has been set to start on January 23rd and to last until February 7th. The Philippine Carnival Association is again taking all steps to make the coming festival a truly mammoth national celebration. Amusements of all sorts, including the latest hits in the most famous show places in America and Europe, will be combined with varied educational and other features.

The Manila carnival season is a notable national event in the Philippines. During the carnival week, Manila is the rendezvous of thousands and thousands of visitors coming from all parts of the Philippines and also from nearby foreign countries.

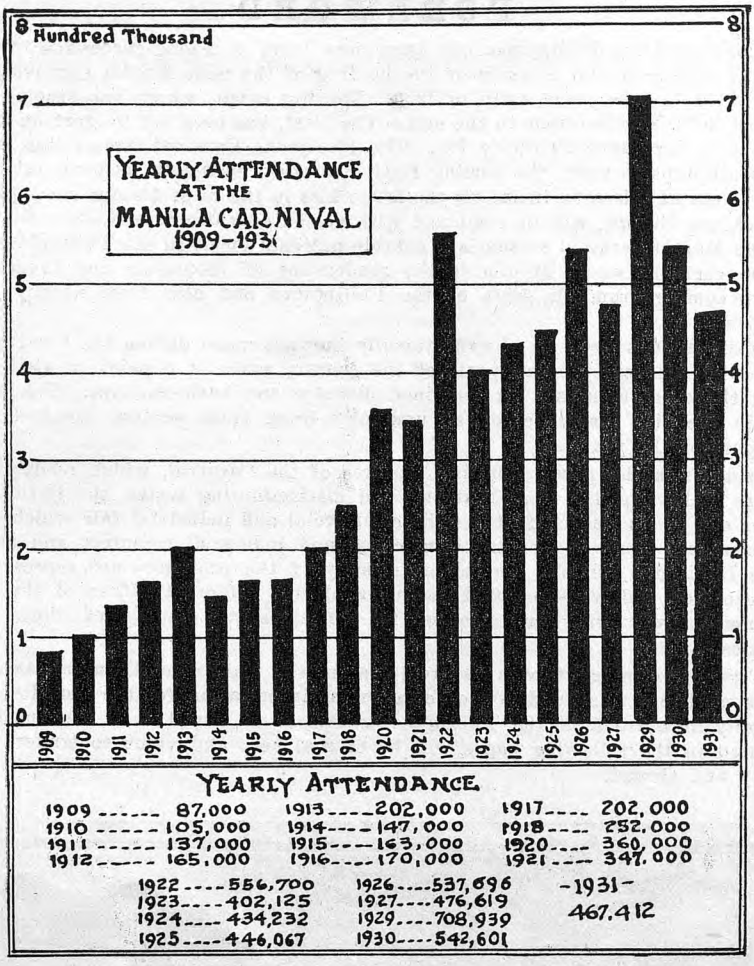

Business finds itself in an exceptionally buoyant mood during the carnival days. Business men from different parts of the country make it a point to visit Manila during the carnival season on combined pleasure and business trips. The business firms in the city always enjoy an unusually brisk trade seldom equalled in any other part of the year.

Aside from the purely amusing features of the Carnival, which readily satisfy pleasure seekers of the most fantastic and discriminating tastes, the Carnival also has for one of its leading features the commercial and industrial fair which consists of a complete exhibition of the commercial and industrial resources and activities of the Philippine Islands. In this fair many of the provinces are represented in well-decorated and well-presented booths, while the different offices of the Insular Government vie with one another in the elaborate display of their varied activities.

With the coming of each carnival season, the Philippine Carnival Association always publishes this handbook of commercial information for the benefit of those especially interested in the Philippine trade. It is hoped that the information presented in the following pages will be of real help and value to traders in this country and abroad.

MAIN GATE

MANILA CARNIVAL IS GROWING BIGGER AND BETTER EVERY YEAR

Through its industrial and commercial fair, the Manila Carnival has proven to be a great factor in the economic development and social uplift of the Philippines. The varied exhibits typifying the agricultural and industrial potentialities of this country make the curious pleasure-seekers conscious that this is really a land of untold possibilities. The attendance last year, although it was not extraordinarily big, bespeaks well of the esteem of the people for this great institution. The keen interest which the neighboring countries are showing. and their regular participation in its celebration and observance, by means of which their economic and social life is made known to us through their attractive and interesting exhibits, is a step forward towards the creation of a more lasting bond of sympathy among the oriental peoples and a common understanding about their needs and problems.

The Manila Carnival is not only identified by its varying portrayal of commercial and industrial progress but also by its great shows. Through them the people have an opportunity for a healthy and wholesome recreation and enjoyment. The coming Carnival will surpass all previous Carnivals in performance and in the display of our Philippine economic resources.

FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT THE PHILIPPINES

LOCATION, AREA AND POPULATION

The Philippine Islands lie to the southeast of Asia, and are situated between 5° and 22° North Latitude and 117° and 127° East Longtitude. The Philippine Group includes 7,083 islands with a total area of 114,400 square miles and an estimated present population of 12,859,300.

MANILA, A FAR EASTERN TRADE AND SHIPPING CENTER

Manila, the capital and largest city in the Philippines has an area of about 14 square miles and an estimated present population of 370,160. As a trade center, Manila holds an enviable position as a distributing center for American goods in the Orient and also in relation to the markets and resources of the Far East. As a shipping center, Manila has excellent natural facilities because it is on the important steamship routes between China and Australia; it is on many of the important lines between the United States and the Orient, and also on many lines running to Europe. Although as a whole Manila cannot serve as a transhipping point for all the Far Eastern countries, yet it occupies a commanding position in regard to other parts, such as North Australasia, Australasia, French East Indies and Southern China. Within a radius of 1,700 miles or at a distance from Manila to Yokohama, it is estimated that there are 126,000,000 people, while with a larger circle one of 3,500 miles in radius or a distance from Manila to Bombay, nearly 800,000,000 or about one-half of the world's population live.

PORT FACILITIES

The port of Manila is provided with three covered piers and one wharf for the exclusive use of foreign commercial vessels, and one pier for the use of United States Army and Navy vessels. Eleven ocean-going vessels may be accommodated at one time. Pier No. 7, the largest and newest, is 1,400 feet long and 240 feet wide. It is considered to be one of the finest constructed and best equipped piers in the world to-day. The completion of this pier has brought much relief to congestion of cargo which was common in previous years. This and other commercial piers are owned by the Philippine Government and the operation placed under the control of the Manila Terminal Company, the port has gained an enviable reputation with respect to efficiency, speed and economy in the handling of ocean freight and rapid turn-around of vessels.

Of the 800,000 tons of cargo brought into the port of Manila by foreign vessels during 1929 about 700,000 were discharged onto these four piers and the rest onto lighters at shipside, while the total number of foreign vessels which took berth on all the piers was 913 as compared with 668 during the previous year. Besides these piers, there are covered and open deck lighterage available for general cargo. Most of these interisland vessels berth inside the Pasig River.

The smaller ports of entry are Cebu, Iloilo, Zamboanga, Jolo, Legaspi, and Davao. These ports have good harbors, and alongside their wharves steamers can load and unload their cargo with perfect safety. There are also about 200 ports of call in all the Philippines for interisland vessels, all of which are accessible to the port of Manila and other ports of entry.

AGRICULTURE AND NATURAL RESOURCES

The Philippines is preeminently an agricultural country with an area of about 30,000,000 hectares. Of this amount, only about 3,757,000 hectares are under cultivation, 19,617,000 hectares are covered with forest, 5,600,000 are grass and open land, 300,000 are mangrove and swamp, and the rest consists of the unexplored area. In the cultivated portion, palay, abaca, sugar cane, coconuts, tobacco, corn, maguey, cacao and coffee are the principal crops raised, and the aggregate value of these crops in the provincial markets which were produced during the year 1930 amounted to about ₱453,000,000. From the forest, 1,466,000 cubic meters of commercial timber were cut, about 195,000 cubic meters of which worth ₱5,486,000 were exported in 1930, while the rest was consumed locally. It is estimated that the total stand of commercial timber in these forests is about 200,000,000,000 board feet. About 80% of the grass land, because of their favorable climatic conditions and offering excellent pasture and necessary streams of pure and clear water, are considered highly adapted to stock raising.

Another important industry in the Philippines is fishing, which, if properly developed, would supply the Islands with enough fish for local consumption and a great deal more for export. The Philippine waters abound with food fish but at the present time the Islands import annually over four million pesos worth of fish, both fresh and preserved. It is estimated that in the City of Manila alone, with a population of 400,000, ₱6,000,000 worth of fresh fish, besides about ₱500,000 worth of dried, smoked, pickled and canned fish, is consumed annually.

Although numerous deposits of economic minerals are found in almost all the Islands, the mining industry here is still in its infant stage. According to surveys made by the Bureau of Science, the total iron ore reserves in the deposits found in the provinces of Surigao, Bulacan and Camarines Norte, is estimated at 520,000,000 metric tons. Conservative estimates made by the same Bureau show that at least 60,000,000 tons of coal exist in various coal deposits of Bulacan, Cebu, Palawan, Mindoro, Masbate and Mindanao. Gold is also found in many parts of the Philippines, and the estimated output in 1930 was about ₱7,409,598.

MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES

An increased development of the manufacturing industries in the Philippines may be seen in the following summary of manufactures according to the Census of 1918, compared with the figures corresponding to those of 1903. According to the census of 1903, there were in the Islands 3,259 industrial establishments with an aggregate capital of ₱53,159,580.00, the cost of materials used were ₱25,049,452.00 and the total value of production amounted to ₱41.700,215.00. In 1918, or 15 years later, the number of establishments increased to 8,354, the aggregate capital was ₱222,473,592.00, the cost of materials used ₱160,877,154.00, and the total value of products amounted to ₱356.094.433.00.

TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATION

Various means of conveyances overland and many interisland steamers form the domestic transportation facilities of the Philippines. At the end of the year 1930, there were engaged in the coastwise trade 422 steam and 1,281 sailing vessels. Besides these, there were 1,889 harbor crafts for inland water transportation. At the end of the year 1930, 1,293,432 kilometers of railroad lines were in operation in the Islands. In the City of Manila and nearby province of Rizal, the Manila Electric Co. maintains an electric car service, the total extent of its lines being almost 83.00 kilometers and operating about 142 cars and handled about 35,781,246 passengers in 1930. Motor vehicles, numbering 22,899 automobiles and 14,380 trucks were in operation during the year 1930. During the same year, the total extension of first class roads was 7,286.6 kilometers; second class roads, 3,765.5 kilometers, and third class roads, 2,353.4 kilometers. There were in operation during the year 1930, 986 post-offices, 620 telegraph offices including wireless stations and cable offices, and about 25,747 telephone instruments all over the Islands.

LABOR

There is a sufficient number of laborers in the Philippines. In fact, the Census of 1918 shows that there were registered 3,893,544 laborers of whom only an average of 2,098,741 were regularly employed in agricultural, commercial, transportation and manufacturing industries. The alleged insufficiency of laborers, therefore, may be attributed to the massing of population in the more developed portions of the Archipelago.

BANKING, CURRENCY AND FINANCE

The growth in the business of commercial banks in the Philippine Islands shows an increase in their assets of from ₱63,745,929 for 1913 to ₱262,220,613 for 1930.

The coins used in the Philippines at the present time are of the following denominations: one peso, fifty centavos, twenty centavos, ten centavos, five centavos and one centavo. The paper money is issued in one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred and five hundred-peso denominations. On December 31, 1930, the total circulation was ₱108,463,106 as compared with ₱123,810,675 for 1929. The Philippine Government is self-supporting and it derives its revenues mostly from customs collections, internal revenue taxes, income tax, land tax, and cedula tax. The total revenue for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1930, was ₱94,984,430 as compared with ₱102,490,070 for 1929.

FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC TRADE

The value of our trade for 1930 reached ₱512,520,162, compared with ₱623,214,234 for the previous year.

The domestic trade of the Philippines consists of the distribution of imported articles, the selling of native products to consumers and the collecting of export products for foreign markets. The value of sales and resales of these articles to retail dealers and then to the consumers throughout the country amounted to ₱1,005,757,484 in 1930 as against ₱1,198,618,364 in 1929.

REVIEW OF THE BUSINESS CONDITIONS DURING THE FIRST TEN MONTHS OF 1931

The trade depression which we reported in our last review and which has been increasing in intensity during the last eighteen months, still gives no trace of lighting up. Because of its world-wide scope, there is little probability of general improvement in any one sector. The remedy for the situation should therefore have to be made at the source of the trouble. Drastic measures are being tried to ameliorate the situation in Europe which is evidently most hard hit by the depression. President Hoover has just negotiated with creditor nations a moratorium of all international governmental debts for a period of one year. This is expected to solve partly the continuous drain of gold from parts of Europe to the United States and to France. Already its effect in Europe and the United States is being hailed as quite favorable, and its repercussion should in the near future be felt in this country.

In some factors the silver lining is already manifestly seen. Prices are at rock bottom but, at least for the staples, they have become more stable. The range of the ebb and flow has been very thin indicating possible early improvement in the situation. Agricultural output recorded a slightly higher level thus mitigating the bitter pang that a smaller crop would otherwise have aggravated, especially in the provinces. Mining, especially gold mining, reported a bonanza, and fishing is expanding, although deep-sea fishing is evidently hard hit. Construction work, residential, business and public, continued its upward trend thus reducing the menace of acute unemployment.

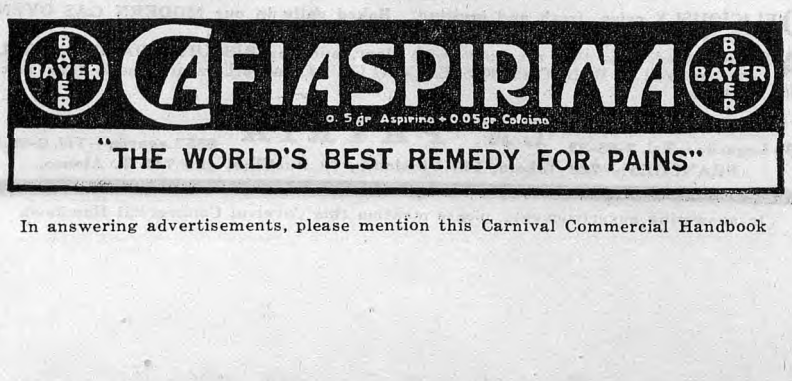

In the face of these and perhaps outweighing them in their effects on the business situation, are a great number of the vital business factors. Prices are in many cases much lower than cost of production and certain sections of the country are in despair. The monetary circulation continues careering downwards. In August of this year, there was barely ₱100,000,000 in circulation or about 20 to 30 per cent lower than the cash requirements of the business of the country. Such a situation naturally forces down prices and business activity and dampen the spirit of the business community.

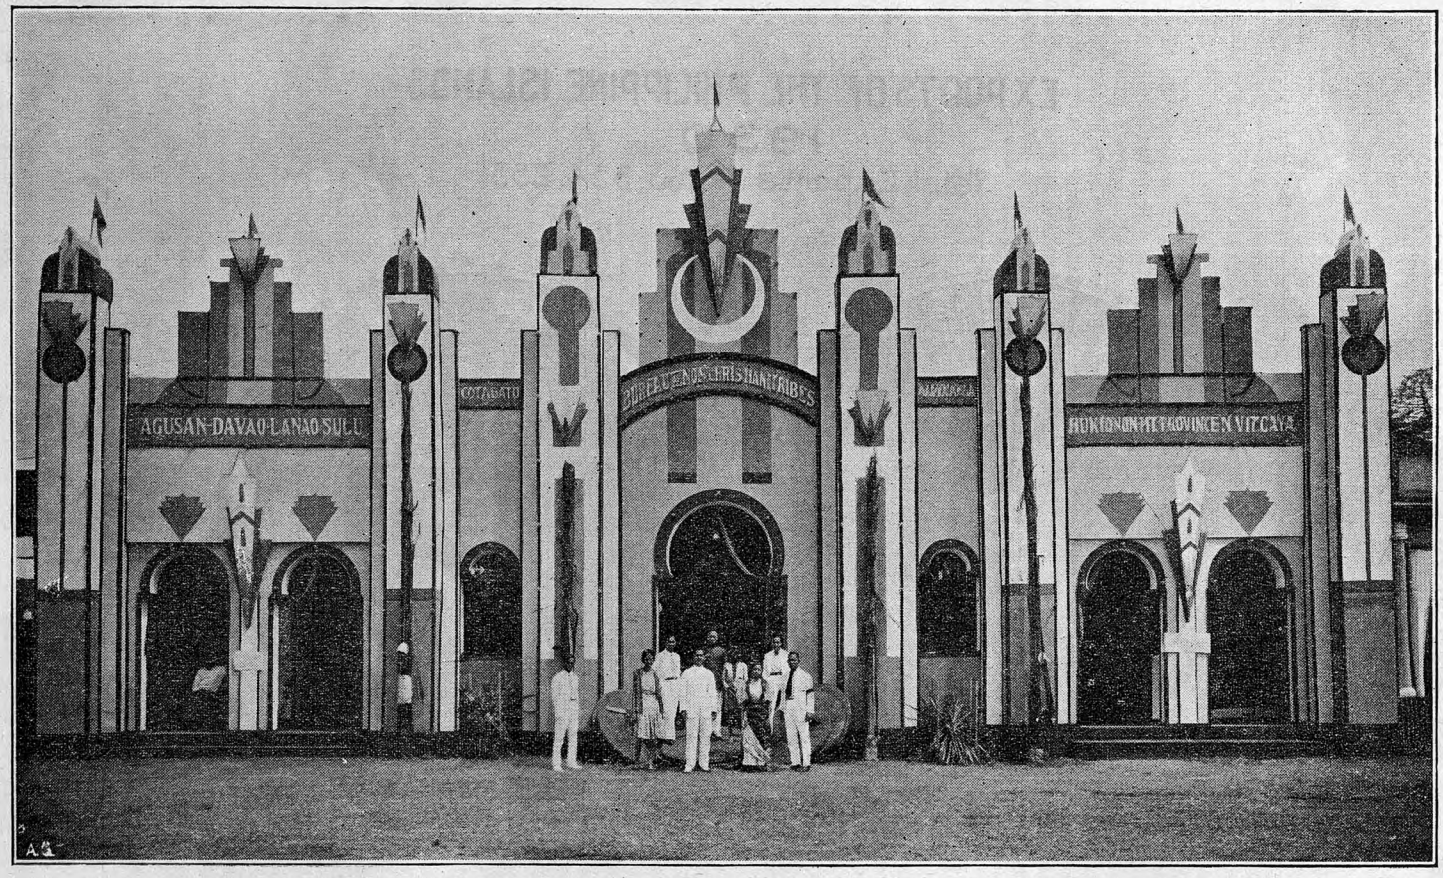

The foreign trade of the country is in a much stronger position than in the previous year. For the first six months of 1931 the balance of trade in favor of the country was over ₱50,000,000 as against ₱15,000,000. This should have improved the monetary situation had the balance not been undoubtedly made to pay for the invisible obligations in previous years. The decrease in the foreign trade by about ₱26,000.000 during the first six months should not alarm us, as, instead, it is an indication of more cautious buying on the part of local jobbers and importers.

The domestic trade slumped considerably because of the financial situation. The fall in domestic trade is practically 20 per cent of last year's. Money has been scarce, credit very tight and unemployment, while not worse than last year, is not improving. A run on the banks was anticipated, but only one suffered heavy withdrawals of deposits. The financial situation is, however, well on hand and a collapse of any bank is unlikely. The banks are statistically sound and reserves are on a safe margin to their liabilities.

The industrial establishments have fared badly. A great number have closed and are working part time. And agitators have not learned better than fomenting strikes at such a time. Two major strikes were declared in the City during the period.

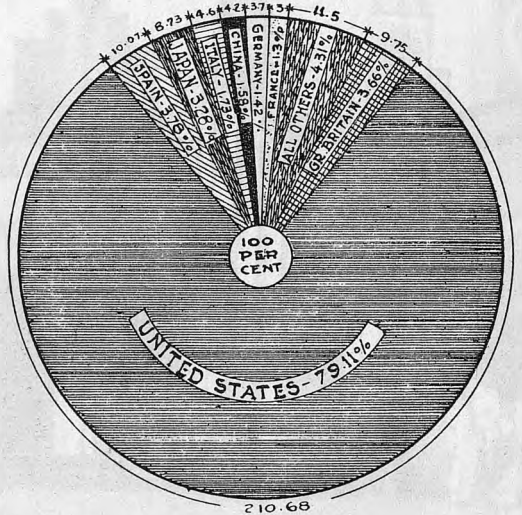

The situation is indeed still precarious, although there is no untoward indication for us to despair. We have fathomed the depth and perhaps still deeper abysses are reserved for us to explore, but the up grade cannot be far distant. A repercussion of the expected improvement in Europe and the United States should be felt here before long.

ABACA (MANILA HEMP)

The Philippines has a natural monopoly of abaca. The plant is a native of the Islands, and is a product of a peculiar combination of climatic and soil conditions. Attempts to transplant it elsewhere in the tropics—in the East Indies, India, Formosa, West Indies, Guatemala, and Florida—have not so far produced a fiber which measures up to the Philippine product. The most valuable of all fibers for cordage is produced from the leaf stalks of this Philippine plant. The plant throws from twelve to thirty suckers from its underground root stock and reaches an average height of from five to eight meters. "Manila hemp" is the name used in the commercial world for the fiber exported from the Philippines, although the name "Abaca" is also gaining in use.

Abaca is grown in those sections of the Archipelago where there is plenty of rainfall, evenly distributed throughout the year. The places where the climatic and soil conditions are most favorable for its production are along the eastern and southern coasts. The most important abaca-producing provinces are: Leyte, Albay, Sorsogon, Samar, Davao, Camarines Sur, Misamis, Bukidnon, Camarines Norte, Agusan, Cavite and Surigao.

The abaca plantations in the Philippines are usually in small patches of land owned by individual farmers who do the planting and the stripping of the fiber, although they usually require extra help in stripping. Extensive plantations of hemp, however, are found in many places. The following table will show the areas planted to abaca and the volume and value of the output during the last ten years:

Year	Area Cultivated Hectares	Production Kilos	Value
1920	559,400	165,081,000	₱63,059,000
1921	548,100	108,354,000	26,829,000
1922	495,000	121,046,000	19,919,000
1923	513,420	188,889,000	39,317,000

Abaca is primarily a cordage fiber, and as a cordage material it has no equal. For ships' rope, its relative tensile strength is above that of the English rope as was clearly demonstrated by the following tests: "A Manila rope 7.5 centimeters in circumference and 3.35 meters in length stood a strain of 2,122.27 klios before breaking. The English rope of the same size broke with 1,765 kilos. In a second test the Manila rope, 3.56 centimeters in circumference, broke with 677.27 kilos while the English rope of the same size broke with only 538,18 kilos." Its only competitor now is sisal, which is at present used extensively in the manufacture of binder twine. Even for this purpose, however, sisal is inferior to Manila hemp.

There are still opportunities for the extension of the abaca industry in the Philippines. Improved methods of cultivation would greatly increase the production, while enormous areas now covered with forests could be converted into productive abaca plantations. During the past ten years the subject of modern fiber stripping machinery to replace the present common methods, has received a great deal of attention, and as a result several stripping devices are now actually in operation or under trial on the plantations.

PHILIPPINE SUGAR INDUSTRY

History

Sugar production is one of the leading and most promising industries in the Philippines today. Sugar cane was cultivated in the Islands long before Magellan discovered the Philippines in 1521. History records its introduction from India and Java, where sugar cane is believed to have been first cultivated, although some Filipinos believe it to be indigenous to these islands.

Development

Despite the great age of the sugar industry in the Philippines, its development has not been as rapid as that of other sugar producing countries such as Cuba, Hawaii, Porto Rico and Formosa. This is clearly demonstrated by the following statistics showing the exportation of sugar from the Philippine Islands during American occupation and the latter 27 years of the Spanish regime:

Before U. S. Occupation (1872-1898) (Metric Tons of 2204 lbs.)		U. S. Occupation (1899-1930) (Metric Tons of 2204 lbs.)

The increase in yields of recent years has been largely due to the replacing of antiquated with modern methods of sugar production and manufacture, in which low-grade sugars known as "muscovado" were replaced with centrifugal sugars. This change which was inaugurated in 1910 through the erection of the first sugar central in San Jose, Mindoro, followed the granting of the free entry now being enjoyed by Philippine sugar in the United States markets, and resulted in the substitution of from 1,500 to 2,000 muscovado mills producing 250,000 tons by 46 modern centrals with a combined capacity of 900,000 tons. As a result of this change which has been made during the last decade, about 85 per cent of the sugar now produced in the islands is in the form of centrifugals, polarizing from 96° to 97°. This development is clearly shown in the following table compiled from the reports of the Bureau of Customs for the last 12 years, classified as centrifugal, muscovado and refined:

Present Status

Actually occupying the ninth place, the Philippines is destined to be one of the greatest sugar producers of the world. As a source of the country's wealth, sugar now ranks first and foremost among the export products of the Islands. The value of sugar exported in 1930 was ₱104,480,451 as against ₱106,488.298 in 1929. It is the largest item of our exportations, constituting 30.66 per cent thereof. It is estimated that the area devoted to sugar cane cultivation in 1929 was 257,710 hectares.

Among the provinces in the islands, Occidental Negros ranks first and foremost as a sugar producer. Then come in the order of their ranks, Pampanga, Batangas, Oriental Negros, Iloilo, Laguna, Tarlac, Ilocos Sur, Capiz, Cebu, Mindoro, Pangasinan, Bataan, Antique, Cavite, Bulacan, La Union, and Rizal.

Outlook for the Industry

Located within the same latitudes, the Philippines possesses climatic conditions highly favorable to cane cultivation similar to those found in Cuba, Java, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, the four greatest cane sugar producers of the world today. In land surface, the Philippines is almost three times Java's or Cuba's, while Hawaii is only as large as our Mountain Province, and Porto Rico, our Nueva Vizcaya. Yet Cuba in the 1929-1930 season, produced 4,628,354 tons; Java 2,914,537 tons; Hawaii 815,000 tons; and Porto Rico 680,000 tons while the Philippines only 771,000—44,000 tons less than the small territory of Hawaii.

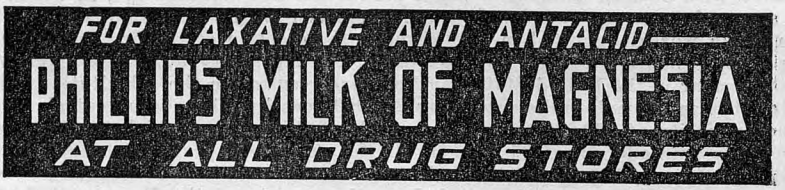

The biggest problem of the Philippine sugar industry is how to lower the very high cost of production, which makes the industry depend entirely on the free entry accorded us in the United States market. In other words, if Philippine sugar had to pay the duty being paid by Cuban or Javan sugars in the United States, our sugar industry would find it hard, if not impossible, to survive. A big factor in lowering the cost of production is to increase the yield per hectare. This can be achieved by more scientific cultivation, fertilizing, seed selection, and pest control.

PHILIPPINE TOBACCO

ITS PROBLEMS AND PLACE IN THE WORLD'S TRADE

Tobacco is now cultivated thruout the world. The first twelve from a list of forty-five tobacco producing countries may be arranged on the basis of the amount of their average production for 1920-1922 in the following order: United States, India, China, Brazil, Japan, Dutch East Indies, Russia, Philippines, Germany, Greece, Cuba and France. It is interesting to note that the Philippines would rank first as a tobacco producer in Europe, Africa or Australia, second in either North America or South America. She is fifth in Asia and eighth in the world.

The relative position of the Philippines as a tobacco producer in the world is the more remarkable when the fact is considered that tobacco was not known in this country until the latter part of the 16th century when it was introduced here from Mexico. Since that time it has been cultivated and its importance in the trade steadily increased. The tobacco monopoly established in 1783 by the Spanish government gave a great impetus to this rapidly growing industry. The admission free of duty into the United States of Philippine tobacco and its products, at first in limited quantities and later on in any amount, has brought about radical changes in the preparation of tobacco products for consumption in the American market, the retention of which depends upon the improvement of the quality of leaf tobacco, and the production of really good tobacco manufactures, two of the main problems of the tobacco industry.

The Philippine Government, in its efforts to develop the industry and to maintain and open new markets abroad, seeks to improve the quality of leaf tobacco and its manufactures thru the proper enforcement of the provisions of Act. No. 2613 and its amendments together with the rules and regulations issued thereunder. According to this law, tobacco reaches the markets in the form of leaf, or in the form of manufactured or partially manufactured tobacco products.

Leaf tobacco is now produced in practically all parts of the Philippines, particularly in Isabela and Cagayan where the choicest leaves of exquisite aroma are produced. Other important producing provinces are La Union, Pangasinan, Nueva Ecija, Ilocos Norte and Cebu. No person, except a planter selling tobacco of his own production to registered dealers in the province where the tobacco is grown, may deal in leaf tobacco, unless he is duly authorized by the Government to do so. In other words, leaf tobacco is handled in the trade only by dealers who are registered as such in the Bureau of Internal Revenue. All leaf-tobacco to be removed from the province of its origin to Manila, must be inspected either at the point of shipment or at the point of destination. In this way leaf tobacco reaches the exporters or large consumers properly classified and graded according to regulations, and is exported chiefly to Spain, France, United States, and the French East Indies.

Tobacco manufactures which include cigars, cigarettes, smoking and chewing tobacco, snuff and others are subject to government regulations. Accordingly the type of manufactured tobacco products that are intended for export as well as for local consumption is determined by such regulations, and such tobacco products as are manufactured in factories are prepared under most sanitary conditions. But where is the market for the products? Many of the manufacturers are content with supplying the local demand. Some distribute their products locally and at the same time engage in the export trade; while others prepare their manufactures wholly for export. Their best market for cigars are the United States, China, France, Spain, British East Indies, and other Oriental countries; and for cigarettes, French East Indies, Hongkong, Japan, China, and the British East Indies.

Altho some improvements have been achieved in the tobacco industry as a result of government regulations, yet the industry, in general, leaves much to be desired, especially in marketing the products. However, the organization of tobacco co-operative marketing associations in the provinces and the establishment of tobacco merchants' associations in the City of Manila and other tobacco trading centers promise better days for the industry, as these factors will surely put the tobacco industry on a good, sound and broad basis.

THE COCONUT AND COCONUT PRODUCTS

The Philippines is the third leading coconut producing country and furnishes one-third of the world's supply of copra. The annual return of nuts in these Islands is over 2,000,000,000, and the output of copra is 460,000 tons a year.

Compared with other crops, coconut ranks second in acreage among the principal crops raised in the Philippines, rice being first and corn third. For the year ended June 30, 1930, it is estimated that there were about 550,840 hectares planted to coconut palms with an average of 190 trees to a hectare.

Of all Philippine staples the coconut has the most uses. It is the product that furnishes raw material directly or indirectly to three important Philippine industries copra meal, coconut oil, and desiccated coconut industry. The combined export value of the products from these industries amounted to about ₱74,887,000 in 1930.

The exportation of copra dates back as far as 1866. From 36,807 kilos valued at ₱2,880 in that year, the export figures went up to 173,572,680 kilos with a corresponding value of ₱26,866,875 in 1930. From 1916 to 1921 there was a big decline in the shipments due to the establishment of many local mills, which absorbed the bulk of the copra output. From 1921 on, however, there was a revival in the export trade on account of the renewed activities of European and American mills, which, during and immediately after the war, were out of operation. To secure a constant supply of copra for American mills, export houses representing oil interests in the United States have established offices in Manila and in Cebu, where they compete with the local mills in the purchase of raw materials. The opening of ports in Tayabas and in the Bicol region at which ocean-going vessels call from time to time to load for foreign countries, has accentuated the exports of copra.

The manufacture and exportation of coconut oil on a commercial scale did not take place until 1913, when the first oil factory was organized. Previous to that year what little oil was exported was all made in the home by the crude method. From 5,010,429 kilos valued at ₱2,292,678 in 1913, the exportation increased to 139,942,612 kilos valued at ₱73,719,504 in 1919. The years 1918 and 1919 marked the boom of the oil industry in these Isalnds. Operating units then were around thirty. This number, however, gradually decreased as business conditions became adverse.

Copra-cake, the by-product of copra, is in great demand in Europe and in America. It is chiefly used for cattle feed and for fertilizer.

The introduction of the desiccated coconut industry in the Islands furnishes another outlet for coconuts and should serve as an impetus to more coconut production. The establishment of the industry was largely brought about by the 3½ cents protection offered by the United States market to the Philippine products. The first factory was put up in 1922. Today there are six big ocmpanies organized, out of which four are actually operating. The United States absorbs the bulk of this trade. The field offers great possibilities and bright future to prospective investors.

Another by-product of the coconut, which is worth while looking into, is the coir, the fiber obtained from the husks of the nuts. This product is used for calking boats, for making mats and mattings, for upholdstering and stuffing cushions and mattresses and for making rope and brushes. At present, hundred millions of these husks are available for industrial purposes.

THE PHILIPPINE LUMBER INDUSTRY

At the time of the occupation of the Philippine Islands by the United States, the lumber industry was confined very largely to the cutting of the higest grade cabinet and construction woods for which tropical forests have always been noted, and to comparatively small quantities of the more common and plentiful species for cheap and temporary construction. Owing to their relative lack of durability under tropical conditions, these more plentiful species were considered as practically worthless, so that their use was very limited.

Logging was practically confined entirely to hand and animal methods, while, with but two or three mills in Manila and as many more in the provinces, the production of lumber was largely by hand-sawers.

With the establishment of the Bureau of Forestry in 1900 and the loss by fire of most of the records of the old Spanish Forestry Service, a general survey of the forest area of the Philippines, their composition and the character of the various timber producing trees was undertaken as rapidly as possible. This survey soon established the fact that the better known, hard, durable and fancy cabinet and construction woods were comparatively scarce while from 75% to 80% of the timber producing trees belonged to the Dipterocarp or lauan family, and that any extensive development of the lumber industry must depend upon the development of markets for these woods.

Strength and durability tests were then started with the result that the woods of the lauan group were found to equal or surpass, in both strength and durability, the Oregon pine and redwood which were being imported for general construction purposes by the Army, Navy and commercial firms. The established use of American soft woods, however, with the inability to get well sawn and seasoned material of all sizes and the general lack of familiarity with the working qualities of Philippine woods, acted as a deterrent in the general adoption of local timber.

The large amount of construction work and consequent demand for lumber, following the American occupation and the reestablishment of peaceful conditions, however, created a sale for local woods with the result that by 1903, there were fourteen sawmills installed, eight of which were in Manila. The total cut of these mills, rated at a capacity of about 80,000 board feet per day, was not more than 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 board feet per annum, or about 50% of the total reported cut of timber from the public forests.

From this small beginning of a dozen mills sawing a large percentage of the higher grade species brought to them in the form of squared logs and flitches from small hand and carabao logging operations, the lumber industry has grown and today there are some 65 mills in active operation cutting 200,000,000 board feet of lumber, or over 80% of the total cut from the public forests, while the larger mills and an increasing number of the smaller ones are securing their logs by modern steam logging operations. The local use of Philippine lumber has increased from 20,000 or 30,000 board feet to 250,000,000 board feet, while imports have decreased from 30,000,000 board feet to 3,500,000 board feet per year.

PHILIPPINE EMBROIDERY

Although the Filipino women are adept in hand enbroidery and have been engaged in it for several centuries, the industry remained merely a "spare moment" industry until recent years. The local output of hand embroidery in 1918 reached ₱2,500,000 and in 1920, over ₱15,000,000. From the year ending December 31, 1914, when the value of total exports of hand embroidery from the Philippines totalled ₱324,912, until the end of the year 1920, when the total exportation amounted to ₱15,623,567, a period of seven years, the increase was almost forty-nine fold. In 1922, however, because of the weak and unsettled market conditions abroad, the value of Philippine embroidery exported decreased to only ₱11,528,691. In 1930, the exports of this product again decreased to ₱7,183,473. There are today many concerns in and around Manila engaged in the preparation of this handiwork for the export trade.

Most of these concerns are not, strictly speaking, factories. The bigger companies have their headquarters in Manila and a number of sub-agencies in the adjoining provinces. Each concern maintains from five to one hundred employees at its local headquarters, and from ten to one hundred agents who deal with piece workers in or around the city, in the municipalities of Mariquina and Parañaque of the province of Rizal, in the province of Cavite, in the municipality of Taal of the province of Batangas, in Calumpit and Hagonoy of the province of Bulacan and in various parts of Pampanga and Tarlac, not to mention limited districts in the Visayas. The laborers in the local headquarters, mostly women, are for the most part employed on a wage basis and are engaged in embroidering, cutting, sewing, trimming, ribbonning, ironing, and packing for the export trade.

Philippine hand-made embroideries are only of cotton and linen. The materials chiefly used in the making of Philippine hand-made embroideries are nainsock, batiste, voile, georgette, crepe de chine and net cotton. All these materials are imported from the United States. The principal embroidered articles made in the Philippines are lingerie, children's clothes, handkerchiefs, table cloths and underwear of various classes which, for the most part, are prepared according to specification of orders received. The workmanship is generally excellent, and because of this, the Philippine hand-made embroideries will probably continue to hold their position in the American market, notwithstanding a resumption of the manufacture and export of embroideries and laces from Europe. The supply of embroidery workers in the Islands is abundant.

PHILIPPINE HAND WOVEN HATS

An outstanding feature of the present trade for Philippine hats is the increasing demand for the BUNTAL HATS, which are erroneusly called "Bangkoks" in the United States and Europe. These hats have come to be favored by the trade on account of the fact that they hold the shape given to them by the hatters. The best buntal hats can compare favorably with the best Panama.

The buntal hats for men are mainly produced in the picturesque, small town of Lucban, Tayabas; hence the name "Lucban Buntal" given to these hats in the local trade. This town is some 125 kilometers from Manila and can be reached either by a first class automobile road or by railroad. The buntal hats for women are mostly made in the town of Baliwag, Bulacan, although buntal hats for men are also made there. Baliwag is a progressive little town which can be reached after an hour's auto ride from Manila.

Baliwag buntal hats are better known locally as "Bali-buntal." This is superior in many respects to the Lucban buntal, particularly in workmanship and, because of its higher quality, commands a better price than the latter. The ordinary bali-buntal is known as "Baliwag Plain" and those in fancy weaves as Zigzag, Fly Wing, Serpentine, Fancy Stripped and Calade. Hats in fancy weaves are usually made to order at prices similar to the Baliwag Plains.

The trade for buntal hats has been largely confined for the last eight or ten years to the United States; but now, Ehrope is also importing them from the Islands in ever increasing quantities. With the demand greater than the supply, the hatmakers have received a great stimulus to increase production. Lucban buntal alone, not to mention the increase made in bali-buntals, has seen an advance of over 65% in production this year. On the average of 12/1300 ternos (a terno is a set of 8 hats) a week the annual production of Lucban today is conservatively estimated at about 600,000 pieces which would be valued at from ₱1,600,000 to ₱1,800,000 ($800,000 to $900,000).

In classifying hats for the export trade, the color, fineness of the fiber used in weaving and excellnce of the weave are taken into consideration. The bali-buntals are classified generally in the trade as Extra, 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th, while the Lucban buntals are given a more extensive classification. Hats which are clean, good in color, perfect in weave and can be worn without bleaching or coloring, are classified as XXX, XX, X, 1st, 2nd and 3rd, and those which have defects, though the weave is good and even, and hats made of coarse fiber, are classified as "Inferior Fine" and "Inferior Coarse," and those of the coarsest fiber are called "Bangkoks." American classification calls for Inferior Fine XX, X, 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th, but some importers prefer the following: BBB, BB, B, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th, "Inferior Fine" and "Coarse" or Bangkok.

Besides the buntal hats, there are various other types of hats made in the Philippines. Those of commercial value and actually exported are the so-called "Baliwag hats" and "Calasiao hats" made of bamboo; the "Arayat hats" made of buri leaf; and the hemp fiber hats for women, the trade for which has receded as fast as its spectacular rise. Those of less commercial importance at present may be mentioned as the "Sabutan hats" produced in various places around Laguna Lake; the "Pandan hats" made in Dao, Antique, and in Lousiana and Cavinti, Laguna; the "Ticog hats" or "tayuktayuk" made from the stems of plant which are widely distributed from the east coast of Luzon down to Mindanao and in the Visayas, and the so-called "Bamboo plateus" or "Platos" which are woven out of bamboo and buri fibers in Baliwag and Pulilan and for which there was a demand from Europe before the war.

IMPORTS

The imports into the Philippines consist mostly of temperate zone products, such as wheat flour, meat and dairy products and other food-stuffs, as well as articles which are always brought into a new country, such as machineries, cotton and its manufactures, and other manufactured articles. Some tropical products which could be well produced in the Philippines, so that there is little excuse for importing them, are also imported. It should only be a matter of time until the resources along these lines will be developed and practically all tropical products cancelled from the import list.

The following data will show the nature of the most important imports:

VALUES OF PRINCIPAL IMPORTS, YEARS ENDED DECEMBER 31.

	1928	1929	1930

No more handsome or useful purchase, typical of the Philippines, can be made, than some article in leather made of the beautifully marked hides of lizards, pythons and other Philippine reptiles.

Reptile leather is becoming more and more the vogue, as you are aware, and it is interesting to know that the skins of Philippine reptiles are the most sought after for their distinctive markings.

We guarantee that products bearing our trade-mark are of superior workmanship and will not discolor. Look out for this trade mark, when you buy, beware of imitations and poorly tanned skins.

INFORMATION FOR EXHIBITORS

As usual the 1932 Carnival City is so arranged that concession lots are made available all around the Carnival City and in the Midway. These lots are appropriate for shows, amusements, restaurants refreshment parlors and exhibits of commercial and industrial firms. Those at the sides are ordinarily 6 x 20 meters each, and are rented to concessionaires and exhibitors at ₱300.00 each. The midway lots are not uniform in size and rental rates will be given upon request. However, before the lots are disposed of at the regular rates, they are first opened for competitive bids and the highest bidder for any of them obtains the particular lot desired. No bids are considered which are below the regular rates above mentioned. The Philippine Carnival Association constructs the facades without cost to the exhibitors. The construction of the necessary buildings, booths, partitions, etc. are done by, and at the expense of, the concessionaires.

At the South side of the Auditorium is the Main Commercial and Indusrial Fair site. Here exhibitors may display their goods in booths, 3 x 7 meters, constructed by the Philippine Carnival Association, which are rented to exhibitors at ₱250.00 each, the decoration and lighting of the same to be done by and at the expense of the exhibitors. If desired, exhibitors may rent lots in the midway of the exposition site and erect their own buildings in conformity with their own plans, approved by the Carnival Architect. The charges for such lots will be given upon application.

Concessionaires and exhibitors in the Carnival City will be furnished the usual water and lighting services as well as electric current for power purposes at reasonable rates.

Fire and police protection are provided by the City of Manila, and the Philippine Carnival Association employs fire and police vigilance committees and watchmen. Insurance on exhibits can be arranged for at prevailing rates. In the 1931 Carnival, the rate of premium was 2-½%. Application for insurance of exhibits should be submitted promptly to the Secretary-Treasurer of the Philippine Carnival Association.

If an exhibitor living in the United States or any foreign country has no agent in Manila, he should consign his exhibits to the Philippine Carnival Association which will take charge of its display and employ a reliable person for a reasonable sum to take charge of the exhibits at the exhibitor's expense and following his instructions. A deposit of at least $250.00, U. S. Currency, per unit of 3 x 7 meters taken should be made for payment of the necessary expenses. Any unexpended amount will be returned to the exhibitor.

Exhibits of dutiable goods will be admitted under bond without payment of duty. Allowance should be made for cargo handling, storage and drayage charges.

It is desired that exhibitors emphasize order-taking and sales-making efforts by those in charge of exhibits.

Applications for exhibit spaces in the Commercial and Industrial Fair should be addressed to the Philippine Carnival Association and should reach it on or before January 10th, 1932. Exhibitors in the United States should bear in mind that it usually takes 30 days for a letter from San Francisco, California, to reach Manila.

Remittance of the full amount of charges for rent of the desired space should accompany the application and should be made payable to the Philippine Carnival Association.

At the close of the Commercial and Industrial Fair, all exhibits consigned to the Philippine Carnival Association will be stored at the expense of the respective exhibitors, pending their instructions.
